Cutting through the app: How can mobile health apps meet their true potential? Sep 19, 2018: This report examines the evidence for the potential of apps to promote positive health behavioural change in the UK population. After a thorough evidence review of academic and grey literature, the sourcing of case studies and original analysis of the Understanding Society dataset, this report finds:

- There are a number of app-based innovations that could benefit individuals – and health systems
- This report identifies several health apps that have been proven to reduce unhealthy behaviours such as excessive alcohol consumption and increase positive health behaviours such as a healthy diet and physical exercise. If these positive health behaviours are continued across large population groups, this could have a positive impact on non-communicable disease prevalence rates.
Best practice apps include Gray Matters, that has been shown to improve health behaviours that can reduce the risk of Alzheimer’s in older adults, and Step Away, that has been shown to effectively reduce heavy alcohol consumption.

Health and Care statistics landscape for England: This is a useful new website for getting a quick view of stats by theme covering child and maternal health, sexual health, inequalities (as shown below), lifestyles & behaviours, mental health and more. Getting up to speed on public health stats just got a lot more straightforward! The decentralised nature of the health and care system in England means that a number of organisations are involved in the collection of data that underpin official statistics and the publication of a range of outputs. The English Health Statistics Steering Group have developed this health and social care landscape which provides links to all key official health and social care statistics in a central place. The landscape is intended to help all users find relevant statistics and associated information on specific health topics and cross-cutting themes. The landscape is new and experimental, and will continue to be developed:
